

BowTieLawyer

11/03/2012 · 12:45 PM

Call an Audible! Effectively Making Adjustments in Strategy.

Watching the first half of the State game has inspired a blog! MSU is running a 3-4 defensive scheme. This means there are 3 defensive linemen and 4 linebackers. The problem here is that A&M is blocking 3 defenders with 5 and sometimes 6 blockers. The State defensive front is outnumbered.

This allows the A&M QB, Johnny Football, time to find the open receiver or scramble around and run. Two things he's good at.

The point is you have to have a game plan coming in, but when it's not working and you find yourself trailing by 4 scores it's time for a strategy change.

Divorce is the same way. You have to have a strategy to get to your end game. Be it through litigation or negotiation, but if you find it not working, change strategies!

A recent case I was involved in had the wife doggedly pursuing a cruelty based divorce. But cruelty "proof" was light to say the least. No physical abuse, no real major altercations and no extreme behavior by the husband. The wife's strategy however was to take it all the way and get her divorce, despite that she could not. The husband's strategy was to defend and negotiate. The wife refused. The husband stayed the course, much like, I suspect A&M will stay the course the second half.

Well, after a 1/2 day in trial and the wife's "best" witnesses of cruelty barely making a fizzle with the Court, she decided to negotiate. The end result was an agreement to all issues with both giving more in some areas and taking less in others.

Her forgoing her prior game plan in the face of a defense ready for it resulted in an agreed resolution. Let's hope MSU makes halftime adjustments with their defense and changes their game plan for the better.

UPDATE... The Bulldogs made adjustments at the half they came out with a 4 and 5 down linemen defensive scheme. They have been able to hold a potent A&M offense to just one additional score so far and have scored themselves and are putting together some good looking drives.

Make adjustments in your game plan as needed.

Thompson Law Firm, PLLC
(601) 850-8000
Matthew@ wmtlawfirm.com

Share this:

