Introducing Our NEW Streamlined Newsletter Format

People now spend more time online than watching television. And the top destinations are social media sites like Facebook. This month we look at the consequences of sharing too much personal information on social media and ways to protect yourself.

You might have also noticed that we have launched our newly designed newsletter. Our hope is this format will be a quick browse for information important to you while also providing access to more in-depth information.

As always, let us know your thoughts on any topics you read about here or any questions you might have about your legal rights.

Oversharing Online Can Cost You Your Job ... and More

For better or worse, social networks give us a platform to share literally everything on the Internet.

In today's ever-connected, oversharing world, you should know the risks to your job, health and family from ill-advised online behavior.
