

Germany's New Supply Chain Act – Part 1 of 4 – Introduction

11 June 2021

On 11 June 2021, the German parliament approved the Federal Act on Entrepreneurial Due Diligence Obligations in Supply Chains (“Gesetz über die unternehmerischen Sorgfaltspflichten zur Vermeidung von Menschenrechtsverletzungen in Lieferketten – Lieferkettensorgfaltspflichtengesetz – LkSG”) – German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act.

With effect as of 1 January 2023, companies operating in Germany and employing a certain number of employees will encounter a completely new set of rules obliging them not only to review their supply chains and to enact a supply chain related compliance management system – the new rules demand for remediation measure and may even trigger the need to terminate relationships with suppliers as last resort. Non-compliance with these obligations will be sanctioned in particular with fines of up to 2 % of the yearly global turnover and the exclusion from public tender procedures. Private enforcement by workers unions or non-governmental organisations will further increase the risk that infringements of the new rules expose companies acting in Germany to litigation, financial and reputational risks.

In addition, and from a broader perspective, the German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act is going to have an impact on the standards that companies, irrespective of whether they fall under the statutory scope of German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act, should consider in relation to improve their Environmental Social Governance (ESG) scorings.

Germany's long way to its new Supply Chain Act

Back in 2016, the German government published a National Action Plan (NAP) for the Implementation of the UN Guiding Principles of Business and Human Rights (UNGPs).¹

According to the Coalition Agreement 2018 between the political parties CDU, CSU and SPD, the newly formed government aimed at implementing legally binding legislation if less than 50% of all companies based in Germany with more than 500 employees were undertaking human rights due diligence processes with respect to their value chains by 2020.²

However, already in 2019, government-internal draft legislation proposed by the CSU headed Ministry for Economic Cooperation and Development was leaked, suggesting that at least some members of government expected that the 2020 target was not be reached. The leaked draft act was referred to as the draft “Act to Regulate Human Rights and Environmental Due Diligence in Global Value Chains” (“Entwurf eines Gesetzes zur Regelung menschenrechtlicher und umweltbezogener Sorgfaltspflichten in globalen Wertschöpfungsketten (Sorgfaltspflichtengesetz)”) (2019 Draft).³

In March 2020, the Minister for Economic Cooperation and Development (CSU) and the Minister for Labour and Social Affairs (SPD) jointly presented a revised proposal, this time in a downsized version referred to as Term Sheet for a German “Federal Act on the Strengthening of Corporate Due Diligence to Avoid Human Rights Impacts in Global Value Chains” (“Entwurf für Eckpunkte eines Bundesgesetzes über die Stärkung der unternehmerischen Sorgfaltspflichten zur Vermeidung von Menschenrechtsverletzungen in globalen Wertschöpfungsketten (Sorgfaltspflichtengesetz)”) (Term Sheet 2020).⁴

In October 2020, a monitoring report revealed that the goals of the NAP were not reached. Accordingly, 13 to 17% of companies in Germany only implemented human rights related compliance mechanisms on a voluntary basis.⁵

Against that background, the Ministry of Economy and Energy – which has been headed by the third party of the coalition, Angela Merkel's CDU – started to engage in the discussion and finally agreed to propose a joint draft act that was approved by the government on 3 March 2021 (“Gesetz über die unternehmerischen Sorgfaltspflichten zur Vermeidung von Menschenrechtsverletzungen in Lieferketten (Sorgfaltspflichtengesetz)”) (Government's Proposal 2021).

On that basis, the legislative procedure was launched on 23 March 2021.⁶ Expert hearings were held on 17 May 2021⁷ – and only a day later CDU, CSU and SPD surprisingly stopped the legislative procedure to re-negotiate details of the new rules. Parliament's approval of the Government's Proposal 2021 was initially scheduled for 21 May 2021 but postponed. It took until 27 May 2021 that the government agreed on amendments which were officially introduced to the legislative process by decision of the parliament's committee for Labour and Social Affairs in its session held on 9 June 2021 (Final Amendments 2021).⁸

On that basis, the German parliament finally approved the German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act in its session held on 11 June 2021 – i.e. within the penultimate session prior to the end of the 4 years term of the CDU, CSU and SPD government.

Once officially published in the German Federal Legal Gazette, the German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act will enter into force with effect as of 1 January 2023. This provides for a transitional period of about a year and a half allowing companies to adopt their operations to the new rule set.

Up-coming German Federal Elections in September 2021

In September 2021, Germany is going to hold federal elections. Most of the parties have been publishing the electoral programs in the meantime, providing for a broad range of perspectives on supply chain regulations:

- The currently ruling parties CDU and CSU have not yet published their program (they struggled with finding their front runner until recently). It might be expected that they will not want to go any further and rather preserve the status quo achieved just now.
- The Social Democrats (SPD) celebrate the new German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act and claim this as one of their successes achieved as part of the currently existing government. Anyhow, they want to develop this new legislation further – without clarifying details.⁹
- The Green Party (Bündnis90/Die Grünen) demands for a strict and effective civil law liability of companies that breach human rights and environmental related obligations along their supply chains¹⁰.
- The Socialists Party (Die Linke) wishes to intensify supply chain related regulations e.g. by a strict and effective civil law liability, by considering greenhouse gas neutrality of value chains, by prohibiting the import of rare raw materials and by implementing a comprehensive certification system applicable to raw materials imported from conflict regions.¹¹
- The Liberal Party (FDP) proposes to restrict any supply chain related obligations to direct suppliers only and to reduce administrative burdens such as obligations to document efforts, risk analysis etc. They promote an EU wide regulation to ensure a level playing field to German companies competing with companies from other EU Member States.¹²

Supply chain legislation on the EU level

Supply chain legislation driven by business human rights and environmental related aspects is at the top of the European political agenda as well.

The EU Commission has conducted a “Study on due diligence requirements through the supply chain” published in February 2020¹³ and kicked-off a consultation process in October 2020¹⁴.

Predominantly pushed by highly regulatory-friendly initiatives launched by the European Parliament¹⁵, the EU Commission was expected to publish a draft regulation on supply chain management in June 2021 but this has been postponed until fall 2021 at least, reportedly due to conflicting views particularly between the more regulatory-friendly Justice Commissioner Didier Reynders and his key opponent, the more company-friendly Internal Market Commissioner Thierry Breton.

However, the future EU legislation may have an impact on the German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act to the extent the EU legislation will provide for binding, potentially stronger rules than foreseen by the German lawmaker. If so, Germany will have to adopt its legislation to the future EU standard.

Supply chains & ESG

Not at least the continuing rise of ESG principles provides for the broader background on why supply chain legislation is at the top of the agenda of that many regulators, companies, financial institutions and other stakeholders around the world.

legislation. Sustainability is, without saying, a closely related topic in this context¹⁶.

S – Considering and complying with human rights is at the core of all supply chain legislation, be it in Germany, the UK¹⁷, France or The Netherlands¹⁸.

G – Ensuring an adequate management of supply chain related risk is a critical challenge when setting-up future government structures.

Further Briefings on the German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act to Come

This briefing is Part 1 of a series of briefings aiming at providing an overview on key elements of the new German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act.

Our series will consist of the following briefings:

Part 1: Introduction

Part 2: Compliance requirements

Part 3: Litigation risks

Part 4: FAQs

Key points/15 seconds read/Summary

Companies operating in Germany will have to ensure compliance with the newly enacted rules of the German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act that will enter into effect on 1 January 2023. With this new legislation, Germany lines up with countries like the UK, France and The Netherlands where similar rules have already been acted. The developments on the EU level as well as the up-coming federal elections in September 2021 may trigger changes in the German regulations soon. A&O's series of briefings will provide an overview on key aspects that companies doing business in Germany need to be aware of.
