Robbery is different from other forms of theft crimes – such as credit card theft, identity theft, shoplifting or stealing – because robbery involves the use of intimidation and force to take another person’s property. As a result of its violent nature, robbery is almost always charged as a felony. If convicted of a severe theft crime like bank robbery in Arizona, an individual can face jail time in addition to hefty fines and restitution.

When instances of robbery occur in Arizona, investigating detectives with the police department may obtain video security cameras to start gathering case evidence against a suspect. Over the weekend, I read an article about a bank robbery suspects in Surprise, AZ. Police officers are currently searching for three individuals who are suspected of robbing a Wells Fargo bank this past Saturday afternoon. Although the suspects escaped and left the scene, the police have obtained video footage and released descriptions of the suspects and their getaway car. This is why it is so important to contact a Surprise criminal defense attorney if you think you might be charged with a crime. If you get in touch with an attorney early on in your case, that attorney will have more time to prepare for your defense in court.

Judges and prosecutors do not normally show a lot of sympathy towards those accused of robbery in Arizona. Therefore, you will want to make sure that you contact someone who can help.
